PARSIPPANY, N.J. —Securitas North America Division announced the appointment of Chrissy Toskos as Chief Human Resources Officer. Toskos will have a key role in the division leadership team where she will help to accelerate the organization's transformation—augmenting physical security with technology, transforming the client experience, and developing the workforce of the future.

"I'm thrilled to be joining a purpose-driven organization that clearly puts action behind its words and invests in its commitments. Securitas is leading the way in augmenting physical security with technology. I'm truly excited to see this transformation being supported by the parallel investments required to transform our recruitment, training, development, and inclusion programs to help ensure the workforce is future-ready," said Toskos.

Toskos comes to Securitas after nearly 20 years with Prudential where she helped lead the organization through a transformation of the business and corporate functions. She will draw on that experience to accelerate programs to prepare the Securitas North America workforce to meet future business challenges and deliver client value.

"Chrissy is joining the North America Division leadership team at an exciting and pivotal juncture," said Securitas North America Division President and CEO Greg Anderson. "We are reshaping the way we recruit, support, and retain talent to create a more connected, meaningful experience while bringing clients more engaged teams, expertise that better matches their needs, and a more diverse workforce. Chrissy will help us accelerate the achievement of this goal as we continue to deliver on our commitment to help make the world a safer place—for our employees as well as our partners, clients, and the communities we serve.
